Sara Birnbaum serves as the Slifka-Nadich Fellow at Northeastern University Hillel in Boston, MA, and is in her second year as the Rabbinic Intern at Synagogue Emanu-El in Charleston, South Carolina. She is currently in her fifth and final year of rabbinical school at The Jewish Theological Seminary (JTS).

With more than 25 years of experience in Jewish organizations, Sara has worked in diverse roles across summer camps, synagogues, and schools. She spent 15 summers on educational teams at camps in Pennsylvania, New York, and New Hampshire, and previously served as Educational Director at Shaarei Tikvah in Scarsdale, New York.

Passionate about creating meaningful and relatable Jewish experiences, Sara weaves cooking, art, music, and storytelling into her teaching and pastoral work. In addition to her rabbinic studies, she is a Clinical Social Worker and holds an MSW from Yeshiva University. Her love for Jewish philosophy and lifelong engagement with Jewish learning ultimately led her to pursue the rabbinate.

Outside of her formal roles, Sara teaches virtual and in-person baking classes featuring original recipes inspired by Jewish cuisine from around the world. She is also an avid genealogist who enjoys researching and documenting her family's history and solving longstanding family mysteries.

Sara treasures time with her husband, Dan, and their four children. Together they enjoy boating, hiking, biking, swimming, and exploring new places. For the past 15 years, their family has made their home in Westchester County, NY, after relocating from Massachusetts, where Sara grew up.
